ABSTRACT

Food preference surveys conducted at three CONUS Air Force bases show that average preferences for enlisted personnel do not differ markedly from one base to another. There were very few differences among bases when considering individual foods, and no differences at all when using food classes for comparison. Past research indicates that a change in the existing menu toward more frequent inclusion of high preference foods and deletion of low preference items would improve the overall acceptability of the menu. The data in this present report strongly suggest that one such Air Force menu can satisfy food preferences of Air Force personnel at a variety of installations representing different missions, climates, and locations.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The cooperation and assistance of a great many people were essential to the successful collection of this large amount of data. The authors wish to express their gratitude to all of the Air Force Personnel who aided, and specifically to LTC Robert Pope, the Air Force Representative to the DoD Food RDT&ENG Program at Natick Laboratories.

Special thanks go to John Wetmiller of the Operations Research/Systems Analysis Office (OR/SA) of Natick, and Shirley Conklin of the Air Force Services Office for their assistance in data collection.

The help of Gerald Hertweck of the OR/SA office (Project Manager), and Roger Merwin of the Air Force Services Office (Chief, Food Service) is gratefully acknowledged for facilitating and directing the project from the status of a paper requirement to the field.

We would additionally like to thank the staff members of the Behavioral Sciences Division, Food Sciences Laboratory (Dr. Harry L. Jacobs, Chief) for their support. The efforts of Cpt. Edwin Smutz and Dr. Thomas Nichols in reviewing and improving this paper are greatly appreciated.

INTRODUCTION***

The purpose of this report is to evaluate the consistency of food preferences across a variety of different Air Force installations. The selection of the participating installations by the Air Force was based on several criteria:

- 1) Representation of Air Force commands with distinctly different missions: airlift, the Military Airlift Command (MAC); strategic, the Strategic Air Command (SAC); tactical, the Tactical Air Command (TAC).
- 2) Representation of a broad spectrum of climates typical of Air Force bases in the continental United States.
- 3) Representation of test sites with varying degrees of isolation from large metropolitan areas and from commercial off-base food service.
- 4) Representation of different geographical locations.

The choices which resulted from consideration of these criteria were Travis AFB (MAC, moderate climate, semi-isolated, Fairfield, California), Minot AFB (SAC, cold climate, isolated, Minot, North Dakota), and Homestead AFB (TAC, hot climate, semi-metropolitan, Homestead, Florida).

This wide sampling of locales and climates gives the experimenter a good sample of food habits in most typical Air Force installations.

*During FY 1973-74 this work was performed by the Behavioral Sciences Division, Food Sciences Laboratory of the U.S. Army Natick Laboratories under Task 03, Project Numbers 1J662713AJ45 and 1J662713A034, Analysis and Design of Military Feeding Systems, and Military Food Service and Subsistence Technology, respectively.

METHODOLOGY

The survey form which was used in this study incorporated the traditional 9-point Hedonic scale (Peryam, 1) and a 30-point frequency scale (see Appendix D). The hedonic scale consists of nine separate phrases describing degrees of like and dislike. The subject is asked to choose the phrase which best suits his opinion of the food in general and indicate his choice by darkening the circle containing the corresponding number. The scale ranges from dislike extremely 1, to neither like nor dislike 5, to like extremely 9. The frequency scale requires that the subject choose how often he would like to eat the food. The responses are expressed in days per month as a two digit number (e.g. 01, 24, etc.). If a subject would never like to eat a food, he should mark 00 in the appropriate columns. Additionally, subjects can indicate that they have never tried a food by marking a separate column. In this case, they would not indicate any degree of preference. A more lengthy description of these scales and their development by the Army may be found in the report of all Armed Forces' food preferences (2) and in the Westover AFB report (3).

Incorporated in the survey were several additional food items used for evaluating the validity of individual survey forms. Ten of the foods were purposely duplicated as a check for validity and three fictitious food names were included as a test of accurate observation.

Individuals were selected randomly by computer with the assistance of the Personnel Center at each base. An alphabetic listing of all enlisted personnel was printed from which every Nth person was selected. The final number of subjects (N) used in the computation of the data are as follows: Travis - 617, Minot - 485, and Homestead - 455. The original number of subjects was reduced by 12%, 10% and 11% respectively, due to poorly completed or incomplete survey forms. The decision to eliminate these survey forms was made using at least one of the following methods: 1) visual scanning using objective criteria which eliminated incompletely or carelessly completed forms (e.g. zig-zags, designs, or continuous identical scores), and 2) computer scanning methods.

After visual scanning, a computer program was utilized to further search out those questionnaires which were not answered conscientiously. To do this, three criteria were established which were designed to be as liberal as seemed reasonable so that only subjects with highly incongruous responses were screened out. If any survey form fell into two of the three categories mentioned below, it was eliminated.

- 1) Two product-moment correlations were calculated between the hedonic and frequency responses, one for the sandwiches and one for the meats. It was felt that these correlations should be positive (+, greater than zero) and if either one was not, the subject failed the first criterion.
- 2) The three fictitious foods, called nonsense foods, are braised trake, funistrada, and buttered ermal. If the subject indicated anything other than a "never tried" or a blank response for all three foods, he failed the second criterion.
- 3) Using the ten duplicate items, the subject's average absolute differences were calculated for both hedonic and frequency responses. If either one was more than two standard deviations from the mean of all the subjects, the subject failed the third criterion. The mean hedonic average absolute difference was 0.97, with a standard deviation of 0.67. The mean frequency average absolute difference was 4.80 with a standard deviation of 3.33. Therefore, the cut off points were 2.33 and 11.46, respectively.

The resulting population, when averaged, produced, on the following page, (Table 1) the "typical" background profile. A more detailed display of these characteristics may be found in Appendix II of the report of consumer opinions of the Air Force (Branch 4).

The surveying of Travis AFB, Minot AFB, and Homestead AFB took place between 4 December 1972 and 2 February 1973, starting in California and finishing in Florida. The average temperatures represented a good cross-section of the climate. Homestead averaged 70° with a maximum of 82°F during testing, Travis averaged 45°F, and Minot averaged 0°F with a low of -30°F.

The surveying took place in enlisted recreation centers at Minot and Travis, and in an inoperative dining hall at Homestead. These well lighted rooms were large enough to accommodate at least 200 subjects seated at tables.

RESULTS

The data gathered at Travis AFB, Minot AFB, and Homestead AFB have been tabulated in several different ways. Appendix A contains the mean ratings of the foods for all subjects across bases. The first food list (Table 1) presents the individual foods, grouped by food class. These classes are arranged in the sequence in which a meal is customarily served with appetizers first and desserts last. The data included in this table are the mean, standard deviation, and number of subjects for the hedonic and frequency scale data. In addition, the percents tried and never tried have been computed for each food. These values are determined from the responses to the "never tried" column in the survey (Appendix D). Beneath each value in the table is the rank of that value in relation to all 377 other values in that column.

The next listing of data (Table 2) presents the mean, standard deviation, and N for each of the 33 food classes. All of the values in this table are means of the values for the foods within each class. The ranks of these values are included in parentheses beneath them. Eggs have the highest hedonic mean, beer the highest frequency mean, and nonsense foods have the highest percent never tried. In comparing these class means, the reader should keep in mind that several classes contain four items or less. A mean based on so few items should be considered separately.

Appendix B contains a listing of the data by three separate ranking methods: rank by hedonic mean, frequency mean, and percent never tried. These data are presented in order to facilitate the comparison of the performance of foods on the different scales. The list is arranged with the food item with the highest mean first, and the item with the lowest mean last. That is, the best liked, most frequently liked, and least often tried items will top their respective lists. The combined data matrix comparing the two preference scales which was used in the Fort Lewis report (Meiselman 5) can easily be determined from these lists. The top and bottom 15% from the hedonic and frequency scale lists are equivalent to the first and last 57 items and may be considered to be the well or poorly accepted items in the survey. The middle 70% may be considered the moderately preferred foods on each scale. This division is a useful way of identifying good or bad food items appearing on both scales.

Appendix C, Table 1 is a comparison of the three bases on an item by item basis. A one way analysis of variance was performed on each food using the data (3 treatments) from the bases. When the value of F was statistically significant at the 5% level or greater the Duncan's New Multiple Range Test (6) was utilized to determine the pattern of significant differences between all possible comparisons of the bases, taken two at a time. Several of the F values achieved significance at the 1% or .1% levels. The significance levels determined by the Duncan's test are indicated in this table by stars (*). One star indicates a significant difference at the .05 (5%) level; two stars indicate a significance at the .01 (1%) level. The following table (2) is a summary of the number of foods which were not significantly different as determined by Duncan's multiple comparisons test. The percent figures represent the proportion of the 378 foods which were not significantly different. There are very few significant differences between bases on either the hedonic or frequency scales. The greatest number of differences occurs in the Travis x Homestead hedonic comparison (97 or 26%). The fewest number of differences also occurred in this comparison using the frequency data (20 or 5%).

Number and Percentage of All Foods Which Are Similarly Rated at the Three Air Force Bases

| Base Comparison    | Hedonic Scale Data |     | Frequency Scale Data |     |
|--------------------|--------------------|-----|----------------------|-----|
| Travis x Minot     | 319                | 84% | 351                  | 93% |
| Travis x Homestead | 281                | 74% | 358                  | 95% |
| Minot x Homestead  | 341                | 90% | 328                  | 87% |

There are two possible trends in this data. Travis seems to dominate the significant comparisons in the hedonic data and Minot seems to dominate the significant comparisons in the frequency data. Travis x Minot and Travis x Homestead have 97 and 59 significant differences in the hedonic data while Minot x Homestead has only 37. Because of the fewer number of significant comparisons in the frequency data, the trend exhibited by the Minot data is less clear.

The final analysis performed on the data was a comparison between bases using food class means instead of individual food means. In this form it is possible to discern if there are any broad differences between bases which affect entire classes of foods. The analysis of variance showed that there were no significant differences in any of the 33 food classes. Table 2 in Appendix C is presented in order to show the percentage of significant differences which (determined by Duncan's test) did occur in each food class. The percentages are included for informational value and did not contribute to the determination of significance in the classes.

CONCLUSIONS

The data from the Duncan test and the analysis of variance suggest that there are no major differences in food preferences among the three Air Force bases. Although there are several significant differences resultant from the Duncan analysis (97-frequency data and 193 - hedonic data), they represent only 8% and 17% of the possible number of significant comparisons for the frequency and hedonic data, respectively.

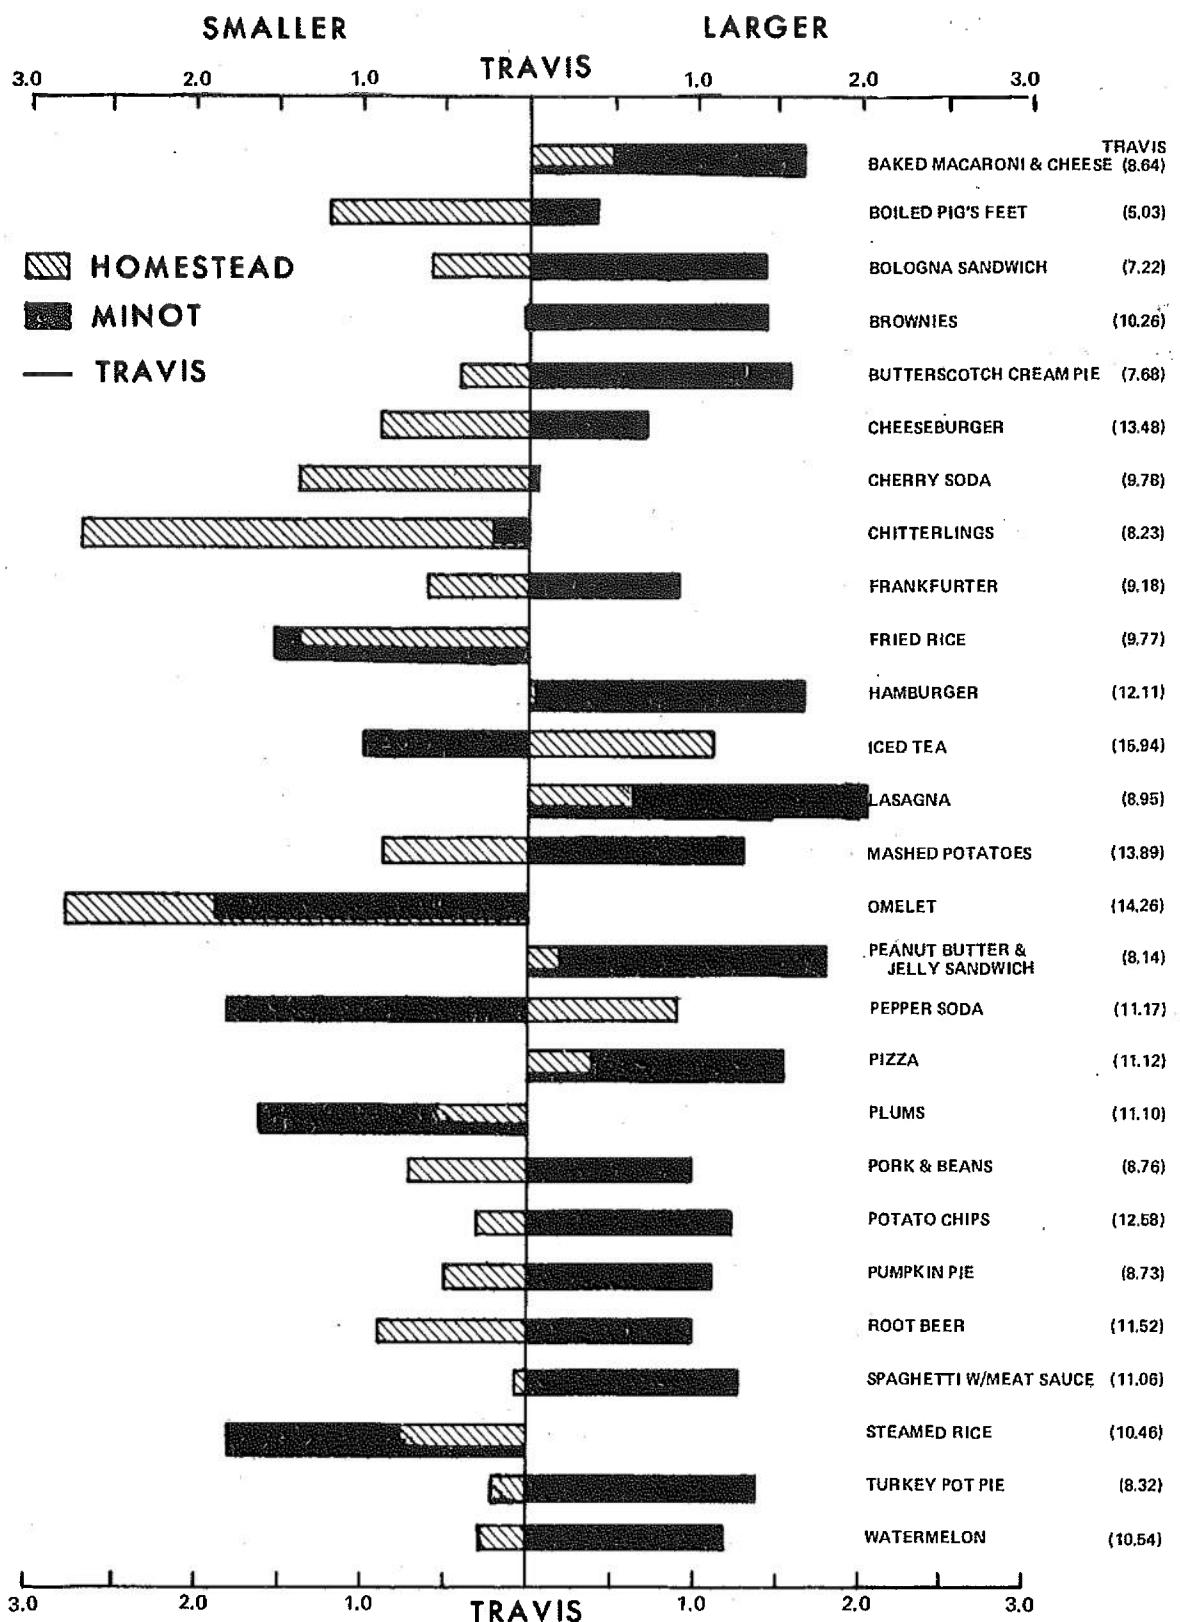

The foods which are significant do not seem to fit any categories such as food class, regional preference, or ethnic preference. However, of the 27 foods which are significantly different on both the hedonic and frequency scales, many are common short order or fast food service items (e.g. hamburger, cheeseburger, bologna sandwich, frankfurter, pizza, peanut butter and jelly sandwich, potato chips). Several other items are quite common in Air Force dining halls (e.g. mashed potatoes, brownies, spaghetti with meat sauce, baked macaroni with cheese). There is no clear reason why these foods should differ from one installation to another. Perhaps a look at the differences between the means would be more revealing.

Of these foods which were significantly different on both scales, the largest differences between the base means were 1.02 for chitterlings (hedonic), and 2.96 for baked macaroni and cheese (frequency), but the average differences were only .48 and 1.86.

Figures 1 and 2 show the comparison between the means of the three bases for the 27 foods. Figure 1 presents the hedonic differences between the means using the Minot means as a reference point. Minot was chosen as the baseline because it had the fewest significantly different comparisons. The bars which are shown in the figure represent the amount of deviation of the Travis and Homestead means with respect to the Minot mean. It is safe to say that Travis subjects rated most foods lower in general than both Minot (19 of 27) and Homestead (23 of 27). The four foods which Travis rated higher than Homestead were boiled pig's feet, chitterlings, fried rice, and steamed rice. These foods have previously been identified as foods predominantly preferred by Blacks (Meiselman 5). A look at the racial distribution of the sample (airmen) reveals that Travis had 18% black subjects (124) while Homestead had only 13% black subjects (65). This could explain the difference in preferences for these foods.

HEDONIC DIFFERENCES BETWEEN BASES FOR SELECTED FOODS

FREQUENCY DIFFERENCES BETWEEN BASES FOR
SELECTED FOODS

Figure 2 presents a similar display of the means for the frequency data. In this case, Travis was selected to be the baseline because of its neutrality. Minot generally prefers these foods more frequently than either Travis (20 of 27), or Homestead (22 of 27). Homestead again demonstrated a comparatively negative feeling toward boiled pig's feet and chitterlings. As Moskowitz (7) has pointed out, a food which has been served recently can receive a different rating than one which has not been served for some time. It is possible that these foods are liked moderately at Homestead but served too often.

The concept of percent never tried is one which has not commonly been used in reporting acceptance data although "percent never want" was used by Meiselman in a report concerning regional food preferences (5). The authors feel that this information is particularly interesting and may address an area not formerly covered. If a subject gave this response (never tried), he could not logically give a hedonic or frequency rating for the same food. Consequently, these foods which are frequently marked as "never tried" represent a unique segment of the population. Several of the foods which were high on this list would be classified as ethnic foods (e.g. sauerbraten), and others have names which may be unfamiliar although the food itself is recognizable (e.g. succotash). It is entirely possible for a seldom tried food to have a moderately high hedonic mean score. For example, veal parmesan which is 47th least often tried, and burritos which is 36th least often tried have means of 6.19 and 6.13, respectively. Menu planners should take notice of this list. Presumably, these foods are moderately well liked but not by the majority of the population.

In the report of the food service at the three bases (Branch, 3), variety of the food was identified as one of the major contributors to dissatisfaction and non-attendance. The consideration of variety is commonly based on foods which the subject likes and would select. The disliked foods (unchosen) do not directly enter into the opinion of variety. For example, if three meats were offered at a meal, and only one interested the consumer, this selection would represent a lack of variety. By using food preference data to determine the high and low preference foods for a population, the menu can be changed to include more high preference foods (increased variety) and fewer or no low preference items. This procedure has been instituted with considerable success in the Fort Lewis experiment (Branch, 8, 9).

From the practical viewpoint of a menu planner, the few number of differences in the 378 foods (among bases) would not dictate a separate menu for each installation. Assuming that these bases are representative of the majority of the CONUS Air Force dining facilities one could devise an improved menu which would be suitable for the entire force. This is not true, however, of the whole of the Armed Forces. In the Armed Forces report (2) which compares all the services' food preferences, there are many more significant differences, indicating a need for special menu considerations.

1 Foods within each class are arranged alphabetically. SEQ=Sequence ID=the number assigned to the food in the survey.

ST DEV=Standard Deviation N=Number of subjects Percent Never Tried and Percent Have Tried are derived from the column in the survey titled "Never Tried" which the subject would mark instead of the hedonic and frequency ratings (see Appendix D).

The numbers in parentheses in the table are the ranks of the values immediately above them in relation to all 377 other values in that column.

1 Foods which were significantly different (>.05 level) in the ANOVA and were used in determining the percentage of foods which differed from the class are identified with an asterisk (*). A significance level of .000 indicates that the Travis, Minot and Homestead data are extremely different and the ANOVA is highly significant ( $p > .000$ ).

Food Preference Survey

Instructions

Your answers to the following questions will help the Armed Forces Menu Planners put foods which you want on the menu. This is not a test. We are interested in your opinion so please do not check your answers with your friends.

On the following pages, please indicate HOW MUCH YOU LIKE OR DISLIKE each food and HOW OFTEN YOU WANT TO EAT the food. If you have never tried the food item or have never heard of it, fill in the circle in the first column labelled NEVER TRIED and leave the rest of the line blank.

If you are familiar with a food on the list and would like to eat it, you should fill in a circle in the column 'Like or Dislike'. In order to say how much you like or dislike a food, look at the following scale.

| 1                 | 2                 | 3                  | 4                | 5                        | 6             | 7               | 8              | 9              |
|-------------------|-------------------|--------------------|------------------|--------------------------|---------------|-----------------|----------------|----------------|
| dislike extremely | dislike very much | dislike moderately | dislike slightly | neither like nor dislike | like slightly | like moderately | like very much | like extremely |

Notice that the rating of 5 is neutral, meaning that you neither like nor dislike the food. Ratings below 5 indicate dislike, while ratings above 5 indicate like. Fill in the circle of the number which best describes your feelings for the particular food item. Remember to mark every food item except the ones which you have never tried.

Example:

If you like Danish Pastry very much, you would fill in:

①②③④⑤⑥⑦⑧⑨

If you dislike it slightly, you would fill in:

①②③④⑤⑥⑦⑧⑨

After rating HOW MUCH YOU LIKE OR DISLIKE THE FOOD, continue across the same line to the last two columns labelled 'How Often You Want To Eat The Food'. Decide how many days per month you would like to eat the food. If you want a food 3 meals or more on the same day, it should still be counted as one day. For any number of days from 01 to 30, fill in two circles, one in each column. If you never want the food, fill in the two zeros, one in each column.

Please note the following examples:

Example 1

If you would like to eat a food 18 days per month, you would mark,

As you can see, the number you chose (18) has been filled in, one digit per column. You should fill in only one circle per column, but both columns must have one circle filled.

Example 2

If you would like a food only once a month, fill in 01.

In this example, the number you chose (1) has only one digit. In this case, you fill in the 0 in the left column and fill in the 1 in the right column.

If you do not want the food at all, you should mark the zero in each column.

This is not a survey of how much you like foods served in the Armed Forces. We are interested in how much you like these foods in general. Think of the food in a general way, rather than any particular time you have eaten it.

Remember, if you are not familiar with the food item, mark the first column labelled NEVER TRIED and leave the other columns blank. If you are familiar with the item, then first rate HOW MUCH YOU LIKE OR DISLIKE THE FOOD and then indicate HOW OFTEN YOU WANT TO EAT THE FOOD.
